

In 1969, half a million people came to Woodstock, a small town in America. They came from all over the USA and from other countries too. They travelled thousand of miles to get there. Some hitchhiked, some walked. It was the greatest pop festival ever.

Everyone was there – Jimi Hendrix, the Rolling Stones, the Who, Sly and the Family Stone, Blood, Sweat and Tears and many other singers and groups.

In the 1960s and 1970s, there were many pop festivals in America and Britain. In the crowds, there were Hell's Angels and Hippies, Black Power and Flower Power. The Hell's Angels had motorbikes, leather jackets and jeans. The Hippies grew their hair long, the men and the women. They wore beads, loose Indian shirts and jeans. Everybody wore jeans. On stage and off stage. The stars and the fans.

America fought a very bad war in Vietnam at that time. Young people had problems with drug abuse. There were traffic jams all over the State of New York to hitchhike: trampen (Autostopp) crowd: Menge

 beads: Glasperlen
 on stage: auf der Bühne drug abuse: Drogenmissbrauch traffic jam: Stau
 site: Platz, Ort
 minds: Gedanken
 bright: hell, erfreulich

during the festival. There were problems with toilets, of course. There was no food to buy. And the weather was bad. But the site of Woodstock became, for four days, a very different mini-nation. Minds were "open", drugs were used, and "love" was "free". The festival with such a number of people was peaceful.

One person died from a heroin overdose and another died in a sleeping bag accidentally being run over by a tractor in a nearby hayfield. There also were two births at the event.

It was a victory of peace and love. Nearly half a million people spent three happy days with music. It was a hope for a brighter future.
